

When I was young I loved to collect football cards.

I still have around 23,862 in my closet. And every night before
I went to bed, I'd pick one card and study all that player's stats real hard. So that maybe when I fell asleep I could dream I was him.

Now I'm on a football card.
I guess you could say My dreams came true. Think I'll ever collect your card?

Letters to the Editors

Dear Nick Mag,
Do you read all of the entries to your contests?

Jack K., age 10
Burnsville, Minnesota

Dear Jack,
Yes, we do. Since we get so many entries to our contests, we often have mail parties, where everyone gets together and helps. To make it a party, we eat pizza, cookies, or doughnuts while we open and read all the entries.

Dear Nick Mag,
My dad won't let me get another rabbit. Please write a song to convince him to let me get another.

Lauren K., age 11
Littleton, Colorado

Dear Lauren,
Maybe this song will help persuade him:

(Sing to the tune of
"The Itsy Bitsy Spider")

Oh, Dad, another rabbit is what I really need.

I know I already have one and two is almost three—

But if you let me get one I will not pester thee.

And my bunny will be happy to have the company.

Dear Nick Mag,
You know that letter you received asking for a food issue? Well, I would like to see a furniture issue!

Caitlin K., age 10
New Orleans, Louisiana

Dear Caitlin,
Are you sitting down? Sofa, we haven't come up with any ideas, but we thank you for putting the idea on the table.

BEASTS OF BURDEN

The donkey and the elephant, which carry the page numbers throughout this issue, are the symbols of the two major U.S. political parties. The Democrats use the donkey because they see it as a humble, courageous, and smart animal. And the Republicans say they adopted the elephant because it is strong, combats tyranny, and never forgets.

We Call It Home

On page 63, there's a picture of the New York City skyline. You can see Zelda Van Gutters taking her break on the roof (roof! roof!) of the building where we work.

THE STATE BORDER

Refrigerator magnets of the fifty states are stuck along the tops of our "American" pages. Next to each magnet is a true fact about that state.

Since it's shaped like a boot, Louisiana kicks off the list right here.

More than one-fourth of LOUISIANA is made up of dirt from other states. The Mississippi River has been depositing soil there for thousands of years.

O, Pioneers!

During the 1800s, pioneers stopped at outposts to restock their supplies as they headed west across America. In 1996, we have The Outpost, a coffee and sandwich shop, right here in the lobby of our building. Since pioneers often traded goods instead of using money, we rounded up some things around the office and tried to make trades with Gabriela, an Outpost manager. Here's what we offered, and here's what we got in exchange:

One extra-large stuffed duck	=	One Gummi Worm
One ball made of rubber bands, weighing 4 1/4 pounds	=	Two small frozen yogurts
Cactus seeds in a decorative Grand Canyon plastic box	=	One can of soda
Fake gold nuggets in a leather pouch	=	Nothing!

WADDLE YOU GIVE US FOR THIS DUCK?

Stayin' Alive

Quit horsin' around, Abe.

R We talked to some people who perform as important American figures. They work at historic sites and tourist areas.

	BENJAMIN FRANKLIN	ABRAHAM LINCOLN	THE STATUE OF LIBERTY
Real name?	Ralph Archbold (below)	James Getty (above)	Jennifer Stewart (below)
Where do you live?	Philadelphia, Pennsylvania	Gettysburg, Pennsylvania	Brooklyn, New York
How long does it take you to dress?	A matter of seconds.	Six or seven minutes. "I also have to put a mole on my right cheek."	About 25 minutes, including applying the green makeup to her face and arms.
Is the hair real?	Yes.	Yes. "In 1970, I grew a beard, and then people started telling me how much I looked like Lincoln."	No. It's a dust mop painted green.
Your most embarrassing moment in costume?	"Many times, people have walked up to me and blurted out 'Abe Lincoln!' And I get embarrassed for them."	When his mole fell off. "I was at a dinner banquet, and I looked down and my mole was on my napkin."	When she accidentally hit a man on the head with her torch.
How are you similar to your character?	Ralph and Ben have the same birthday—January 17.	"I hope I have his belief in the future of our country."	Her nose is just like the Statue's.
How are you different?	Unlike Ben, Ralph is not and never has been Minister to France. And he hasn't invented anything yet.	"Lincoln was a good wrestler, and I would probably be a horrible wrestler."	Jennifer can move. And she isn't 110 years old.
Is it upsetting when other people dress as your character?	It's okay for kids to do it, but "it's annoying when adults do it and try to make Franklin look like a fool."	No. "I like to think of myself as one of the originals, and that's satisfying."	It used to be, but now she's okay with it. "I like it when I see people with the foam crowns on their heads."
Have you ever been recognized out of costume?	Yes, all the time. "Here in Philadelphia, people seem thrilled to recognize me when I'm out of costume. They yell, 'Ben!'"	James tries not to be. "I wear my Cubs hat and sunglasses and go incognito."	No.
Anything else you want to dress up as?	No.	A 19th century New England sea captain. "I'd like to maybe wear an eye patch and a turtleneck."	Mount Rushmore.

AMERICA GETS STUFFED

At this time of year, Americans stuff themselves with turkey and stuffing. But in the past, they've also stuffed themselves with—and into—some other stuff. Here's a look at some funny and foolish American fads from days and crazes gone by.

Go Fish!

Goldfish swallowing bowled a lot of people over in the spring of 1939. It started when, on a bet, a student at Harvard University downed a live fish. His fishy feat made the newspapers, getting people hooked nationwide. Others started swallowing goldfish in record numbers—first three, then six, and then as many as 300 fish in one sitting. Luckily for the fish, the fad floundered and went belly-up by that summer.

Cram Course

College students around the country spent much of the spring of 1959 cramming, but not for exams. They were squeezing themselves into telephone booths. Some groups squished as many as 34 people into the seven-foot-tall booths. Everyone didn't agree on the rules, however. Some people swore by the "sardine position"—no legs or arms dangling outside. Others said that one person had to be able to place a phone call from the booth. Because of the disagreement, no official records were ever set. It didn't matter, though, because by December, people had had their fill of stuffing.

Limited Legroom

In the early 1960s, students were packing up their cars—with themselves. One group of junior high school students (left) set a record by stuffing 31 of themselves into a Volkswagen and its trunk (which is in the front). The trend of cramming into cars soon ran out of gas, though; maybe it wasn't as challenging as phone-booth stuffing.

Sit or Spin

Here are some other freaky fads from years past.

On Top of the World

In 1924, all of Hollywood looked up to Alvin "Shipwreck" Kelly (atop pole, left). That's because a theater owner paid him to sit on top of a pole for a long period of time to attract people to the movies. Shipwreck wasn't the first to sit atop a pole for a long stretch, though: A fifth-century Syrian holy man spent the last 36 years of his life preaching from his perch on a pillar. Shipwreck didn't preach, but he did like to yell down and talk to people, and he even met his wife while pole-sitting. Shipwreck's pole-sitting record was 49 days in Atlantic City, New Jersey, during which time he consumed only liquids.

A Waist of Time

Hula-hooping had millions of Americans' heads (and waists) spinning in 1958. Hula hoops first rolled into the U.S. from Australia, where the original hoops, made of bamboo, were used in gym classes. One Michigan kid took a hula hoop for a whirl that lasted more than 18,000 revolutions. And another person spun inside 14 hoops at once. Hospitals treated people for hoop-related injuries, such as pulled muscles and slipped discs. And the hoop slipped, too. Though they are still around today, the fad lost its whirlwind pace by the summer of 1959.

Summer vegetables and fruit often grow two or three times bigger than normal in ALASKA, where the sun shines up to 20 hours each day.

There's a parkway in TENNESSEE named after Dolly Parton.

Sandusky, OHIO, has 12 roller coasters—more than any other city in the U.S.

For What It's Worth

HERE ARE SOME REAL FACTS ABOUT MONEY.

- Since 1969, no bill worth more than $100 has been printed. The smallest valued coin, last minted in 1857, was the half-cent.
- Dollar bills have the shortest life span of all U.S. currency—an average of just 18 months.
- Coins have a life span of 30 years.
- When paper money gets worn and wrinkled, the U.S. Treasury Department takes the cash back and shreds it.
- Almost $541 million worth of bills are printed every day.
- Paper money was first issued in 1862. Before that, only coins were used.
- Nickels contain only 25 percent nickel, a hard silvery white metal.
- The largest bill ever printed for general circulation was worth $10,000.

Party Animals

This is the time of year when Democratic and Republican candidates make lots of campaign promises. But what if the party mascots got to run for office? Here are some of their possible promises:

The Democratic Donkey

VOTE FOR ME BECAUSE:

My policies are kickin'!

I can pull my own weight.

My opponent's policies are full of wrinkles.

I have good support in the outer burros.

I have read Don Quixote.

I have a bray new vision for America's future.

I will refuse PACK money.

I'll never be your beast of burden.

I'll spend mule-ions on our nation's mountain trails.

I am an excellent donkey-note speaker.

The Republican Elephant

VOTE FOR ME BECAUSE:

I'll work for peanuts.

I'll stomp out everything that's wrong with this country!

I'll always lend an ear.

I'll never forget my campaign promises.

I'll improve trade relations with the Ivory Coast.

I'm against trunk driving.

I herd you loud and clear: No new taxes.

I'm always in charge.

I fly my own jumbo jet.

I'll take criminals to tusk.

They don't have four legs to stand on.

HOW TO MAKE

Note: There are eight napkin rings in all, four on the next page and four on page 47.

1 Carefully tear out the whole page (and page 47).

2 Separate the top of the page from the rings by carefully cutting along the black line. Using scissors, cut along the dotted black line between each of the four strips.

3 Carefully cut along the short lines at both ends of each strip to make tabs. DO NOT cut all the way across.

4 Hold the strip in two hands and curl it into a loop.

5 Put one tab on top of the other.

6 Slowly slide together until the outside edges are even.

7 Roll or fold a napkin and slide it inside the ring.

8 At dinnertime, ask everyone to carefully detach the ends of their napkin rings and read the Thanksgiving poll questions, trivia, and sayings to one another.

ZELDA and LOUISE

RUFFING IT

Featuring Zelda Van Gutters, NICKELODEON MAGAZINE's Roving Reporter

1 As Thanksgiving approached, my turkey friend Louise was nervous and wanted to get out of town. We decided to drive cross-country.

2 Our first stop was Miami Beach, where we teamed up with a flamingo to play beak volleyball.

3 Next, we drove west along the Gulf Coast, then up to the Texas Panhandle.

4 On Thanksgiving night, we stopped in at my aunt and uncle's house in Terrier Haute, Indiana.

5 Driving through the desert, Louise insisted we stop in Las Vegas.

Maybe we should leave. This place is kind of dicey.

Who knows? Maybe my pluck will change.

6 Our next stop was San Francisco, the City by the Bay. It's one hill of a town.

I'm inclined to think maybe we should head back East.

That's steep thinking on your part, Louise. Let's hightail it.

7 After that, we drove east to Chicago, the Windy City.

So what do you think of Chicago, Zelly?

It really blows me away.

8 Finally, we zoomed back to the East Coast and to the highly-Revered city of Boston.

Now I know why they call this place "Beantown."

Zelda, I want to thank you for getting me off the hook. And off the plate. You saved my neck.

Well, it's bean real! Louise told me that if she had but one wishbone, it would be that we travel again next year. I hope so, too.

Home Games

by Andrew Santella

Baseball may be our national pastime, but it actually came from an English game called rounders. And football evolved from English games, too—soccer and rugby. So which sports were born in the U.S.A.? Here's our lineup.

Peach Jam

Basketball has become one of the world's most popular sports—not bad for a game invented by a gym teacher. In 1891, while teaching at the International YMCA Training School in Springfield, Massachusetts, James Naismith (left) came up with the rules of the game. Rule number one was pretty basic: "There must be a ball." The first game, played with peach baskets for goals, ended in a 1-0 score.

Serving It Up

Just eight miles up the road from Springfield, in Holyoke, Massachusetts, another YMCA teacher, William G. Morgan, came up with volleyball for people who thought basketball was too rough. In 1895, Morgan conceived of a game in which two teams volley a ball over a high net.

Goal for It!

Lacrosse was already being played by Native Americans when the first settlers arrived in the 16th century. Tribes of the Iroquois Confederacy (in what is now New York and the Canadian province of Ontario) used long-handled baskets to throw, catch, and carry a ball down the field and into a net for a goal—similar to how lacrosse is still played. The rough game was excellent combat training for the Iroquois: Some of their games lasted for days, as thousands of players battled on a field that stretched for miles. Today's games are much shorter and smaller, with 10 players on each team playing on a soccer-size field.

Skiing Is Believing

For centuries, people tried to walk on water wearing various contraptions on their feet—and ended up sinking like rocks. It wasn't until the introduction of the motorboat in the late 1800s that people were able to make headway on aqua boards. Then, in 1922, Ralph Samuelson was the first person to water-ski. He used two curved pine boards while being pulled by a motorboat on Minnesota's Lake Pepin.

Totally Board

Skateboards were first used in the 1930s, when they were homemade with wood and roller skate wheels. The boards really got rolling in the 1960s, as California surfers used them to sidewalk surf when the waves weren't just right. And today, skateboarding is more popular than surfing.

Pie in the Sky

In the 1920s, Yale University students had fun throwing around upside-down (and empty) pie tins from the nearby Frisbie Baking Company. The pastime caught on, and soon students at many schools were flinging pie tins back and forth. Wham-O, a toy manufacturer, got a big slice of the flying-disc pie in 1957 when it introduced its first plastic disc, named the Pluto Platter because it looked like a flying saucer. (A year later, the name was changed to Frisbee.) In 1968, Ultimate, a non-contact soccer-type game played with a Frisbee, was developed by students at Columbia High School in Maplewood, New Jersey (below).

THE GREEN SCREEN DREAM TEAM

Space Jam, starring Michael Jordan and the Looney Tunes, hits theaters this month. We found out what the hoopla is all about from the movie's animation directors, Bruce Smith and Tony Cervone.

R

Nickelodeon Magazine: Which Looney Tune is the easiest to draw?

Bruce Smith: Probably Porky Pig because he has a very easy shape. He has a big head and mouth. And I would say the hardest to draw is Bugs Bunny, because you have to get his personality into the drawing.

What's Up With That?

Now that's a supermodel!

NM: How did you make Space Jam?

Tony Cervone: The movie started with a script. Then we made storyboards, which are drawings of each scene. Next, we used a green screen [below, right] to shoot the live action with Michael Jordan. After that, the animators drew all the cartoon characters and backgrounds into the live-action scenes, either painting by hand or with computers.

Bruce: Some scenes are made up entirely of animation.

NM: How many animators worked on the film?

Bruce: About a hundred.

NM: How tall is Bugs in the movie?

Tony: Well, we decided that not counting his ears, Bugs should be three feet three inches—about half of Michael's height. In the movie, Michael has to look like he's talking to someone who is a little taller than three feet. So we used actors in green suits running around on their knees as markers when Michael's scenes were shot. In the finished product, the actors were removed from the picture, and Bugs was added [see Screen Play, right].

More about Michael on page 42.

NM: Are any other basketball players in the movie?

Bruce: Yes. Shawn Bradley, Charles Barkley, Patrick Ewing, Muggsey Bogues, and Larry Johnson [above, from left] involuntarily help the aliens.

NM: Did you play basketball on the set?

Tony: We had a hoop on the set, so people played a lot of basketball.

NM: What is the first cartoon you drew?

Bruce: When I was five years old, I traced a Batman lunch box, entered a drawing contest . . . and lost.

Tony: I drew Bozo the Clown all the time.

NM: What advice would you give a kid who wants to be an artist?

Tony: Draw whatever you really enjoy drawing. Otherwise, there's no point to it. One thing I learned in school is that for every good drawing there are probably about 50,000 bad ones.

NM: One-on-one, Michael against Bugs, who would win?

Bruce: Bugs Bunny would win. He can do everything Michael can, and then some.

Tony: I think Bugs would win by putting dynamite in Michael's pants.

Screen Play:

Most of the live action was filmed in front of a green screen. Later, when animation was added, everything green was drawn over with background scenery and cartoon characters. The dots in the background of this picture form a grid, which helps the animators draw everything the correct size.

Jordan

We went one-on-one with Michael Jordan to find out about Space Jam and more.

Nickelodeon Magazine: Who's your favorite Looney Tune?

Michael Jordan: It's got to be Bugs Bunny. Although I act and play ball with all of the Looney Tunes in Space Jam, it's Bugs who really shows me the way. He's natural, smart, funny, and cool as a cucumber ... or a carrot.

NM: In the movie, you play against a team of aliens. Do you believe aliens exist?

MJ: The universe is so enormous that there probably is some sort of life out there. I just hope aliens don't look like the ones in Space Jam. I hope their personalities are better, too.

NM: What would you do if you really met an alien?

MJ: It's hard to say. Maybe I'd offer a swap: I'd give it basketball lessons, if it would teach me its favorite game.

NM: Which is tougher, acting or playing basketball?

MJ: Acting is challenging, but playing basketball is Mercury Rising: Michael Jordan takes his Tune-perature.

Looney Lineup: Jordan, number 23 (above), teams up with the Looney Tunes.

Jams

definitely tougher. If you mess up a scene when you're acting, you get a chance to do it again. When you're in the middle of a basketball game, you don't get any second chances or "do-overs."

NM: Do you ever dream about basketball or golf?

MJ: Playing with a team like the Chicago Bulls is like living a dream, so I don't actually dream about it—I live it. My golf game, though, is more like a nightmare. But it's getting better.

NM: How many pairs of sneakers do you have?

MJ: I don't know the exact number, but there are a lot of them because I wear them out pretty quickly. For every new pair I get, there's usually a pair that is too beat up to wear anymore.

NM: What were you like when you were 12 years old?

MJ: I was a lot like I am now: ambitious, hopeful, hardworking, and curious. And then, just like now, I played a lot of basketball.

NM: Did you ever have a growth spurt?

MJ: I didn't grow tall all at once. I was just always kind of tall for my age.

NM: Did kids ever make fun of your height?

MJ: All the kids were pretty nice to me. And now, there are guys in the NBA who are a lot taller than I am, and I definitely don't make fun of them.

NM: Which historical figures would you have over for a "Dream Team" Thanksgiving dinner?

MJ: I have many heroes both past and present that I would like the opportunity to meet. But for Thanksgiving dinner, there's nobody I'd rather have around my table than my family. They're my real "Dream Team."

NM: Do you prefer pumpkin or apple pie?

MJ: Can't I have both? Since Thanksgiving is coming up, I have to go with pumpkin. But come summer, I'll switch to apple. □

All about Nickelodeon

Also Starring...

Behind the scenes at Kenan & Kel
It takes five days and 75 crew members to produce one half-hour episode of Kenan & Kel, Nickelodeon's spin-off of All That. The crew does everything from directing to making sure the stars have their favorite kind of soda (orange). Here's a peek at some of the people who worked behind the scenes for nearly four months last summer to bring you the show.

Head of the Crew

Name: Brian Robbins

Job: Executive producer with Mike Tollin
What that means: Brian oversees the scriptwriting, casting, and hiring of the entire crew, and he even directs some episodes. He also supervises the editing of each show.

Quality control: Brian has worked both behind and in front of the cameras (he played Eric on Head of the Class), but he prefers producing and directing. "It's more creative, because I work on the whole process," he says. "As an actor, I could only control how I said my lines."

The Write Stuff

Jobs: Writers

What that means: It takes Kevin and Heath (who work as a team) and Dan about one week to come up with the plot and write the script for each episode. And, as the show is rehearsed, they have to get bigger some of the dialogue and jokes to get bigger laughs from the studio audience.

Moonlighting: Dan, who's also the co-executive producer, guest stars as Angus, the rival of Kenan's boss. Kevin and Heath (who are both producers, too) and Dan also write for All That.

One Show, Hold the Mayo

Name: Merrie Dudley

Job: Producer

What that means: Merrie's job is all about the nuts and bolts of the show. She makes a schedule that lets the cast and crew know where they should be and what they should be doing every minute of the 10-hour workdays.

During the summer, each week's schedule would lead up to Friday night's taping in front of a studio audience.

On a roll: "I'm pretty much like a fast-food manager," says Merrie. "It's like I know who's making the fries, who's cleaning the bathroom, and who's working the drive-thru."

Shop 'Til You Drop

Name: Bruce Anthony Marshall

Job: Costume Designer

What that means: Bruce makes sure Kenan, Kel, and all the other actors have the right things to wear in every scene. For an average show, he needs to buy or sew more than 20 different outfits.

Sew much fun: Bruce's favorite part of his job is creating looks for brand-new characters. He once made up costumes for people from imaginary countries. "That's when my job gets really good," he says.

Joel of All Trades

Name: Joel Fisher

Job: Production Coordinator

What that means: Joel keeps things running behind the scenes. He wears a headset and carries a beeper while working so he can be reached at any moment to take care of everyone's requests, which once entailed sending someone to buy a specific flavor of gum.

A dogged worker: "I'll do whatever it takes to make sure the show goes on. I've had producers ask me to walk their dog when there was no way for them to get home to do it," he says.

It's a Dirty Job

Name: David Jordan Jr.

Job: Prop Master

What that means: David builds the show's props and scenery. In one episode, Kel dreams that he is trapped in a giant brown paper bag filled with huge candies, fruit, and ointment. David and his staff had to construct all those objects—mostly by sculpting and painting foam.

Chew on this pencil: David once made an edible pencil for an All That sketch. "I used bubble gum as the center. Then I put Fruit Roll-Ups around the outside and used chocolate sprinkles for the lead," he says.

Scene stealer: David also designs sets for All That. And, wouldn't you know, he designed Stick Stickly.

Names: Kenan Thompson and Kel Mitchell Jobs: Stars

We asked Kenan Thompson (left) and Kel Mitchell about their new show.

Nickelodeon Magazine: How is Kenan & Kel different from All That?

Kenan: Well, on Kenan & Kel we play the same characters every week. We're always getting into trouble. I'm always scheming, trying to come up with a get-rich-quick plan. And Kel follows me because he's my best friend.

NM: Does that happen in real life, too?
Kel: Sometimes, though in real life it's not always Kenan doing the leading.

NM: Do you like the fact that your characters have your real names?

Kenan: Yeah—but we're not really like them. Kel is a lot brighter in real life, and I'm not as much of a schemer as I am on TV.

NM: Did you help develop your characters?

Kenan: Yes. The writers gave us a skeleton of the characters, and we put the meat on them. We bring our own shenanigans into the show.

NM: Why isn't the show called Kel & Kenan?
Kel: Kenan & Kel just flows better. Anyway, we're a team, so I don't mind.

Kenan & Kel airs Saturdays at 8 PM*.

*Show airs one hour earlier in the Central time zone. Time subject to change. Check local listings for details.

SIDONI'S NO PHONY

Nick stars David Sidoni and Melissa Joan Hart are the spokespeople for Nickelodeon's Kids Pick the President campaign coverage. We asked David about the time he spent at the Republican and Democratic Conventions, where Bob Dole and Bill Clinton were officially nominated as their parties' presidential candidates.

Nickelodeon Magazine: Did you get bored during all those speeches?
David Sidoni: No. There were huge video screens where I could either watch the speakers or read along, because the words ran across the screen. I also looked around to see people's reactions.

NM: Did you see many silly hats?
DS: Yes. I saw the silliest hat at the Democratic Convention. It was 15 feet tall and made of lacquered balloons. Each balloon had a political message written on it.

NM: Do you remember any funny slogans?
DS: A lot of funny sayings were on buttons. They were often about

Socks, the Clintons' cat. The Republican buttons read THROW SOCKS OUT OF THE WHITE HOUSE. The Democrats' read WE LOVE SOCKS.

NM: What is the funniest thing that happened at either convention?
DS: The craziest, coolest thing happened at the Democratic Convention. All of a sudden, "Macarena" was played over the loudspeakers, and the whole place went nuts. I did the Macarena with 75-year-old delegates.

NM: During the Democratic Convention, was it exciting to walk around United Center, the home of the Chicago Bulls?
DS: Of course. I'm a huge sports fan. I was excited to be on the convention floor but even more excited to be on the floor where the Bulls play.

NM: Did you ever run for class president?
DS: I did in the sixth grade. I asked 16 of my friends to hold a 30-foot-long banner in front of me while I was giving a speech. The banner read VOTE FOR SIDONI. HE'S NO PHONY. AND THAT'S NO BALONEY. And I won.

Hey, Herb!

Where you ask the president of Nickelodeon, Herb Scannell, anything you want.

People call you "The Big Cheese." Do you even like cheese?

I'm a big cheese fan. My favorite cheeses are really stinky ones—the stinkier the better. One time my wife and I bought some smelly cheese at the store, and then we got on the bus to go home. When I walked on, people must have thought there was a baby in a stinky diaper on board. We had to tell them that it was just our cheese.

What do you do at Nickelodeon?

I'm kind of like a principal, but I don't think the people who work here are afraid of me. I oversee Nickelodeon, Nick at Nite, and TV Land. I'm responsible for everything from Nickelodeon Online to the channels we are starting around the world. I try to make sure that kids are happy with us. It's a problem if they aren't.

Say What?

From the June/July
issue:

We asked you to fill in the speech and thought balloons in this picture. Here are the entries that made some waves.

Man: When your cousin Angela fixed us up on this blind date, she didn't tell me you had pink hair! You're swell!

Woman: Maybe I can get the driver to drop this dork off in the Bermuda Triangle.

Alex W., age 7
New City, New York

Man: Honey, this is great—you, me, and the deep blue sea.

Woman: If that's all there is, where do these ropes lead?

Orion Ross M., age 11
Parkersburg, West Virginia

Man: Why are you holding up your foot?

Woman: I guess he didn't notice I just painted my toenails.

Rob S., age 11
Weatherford, Oklahoma

Man: Honey, our arms seem to be stuck together.

Woman: Oh, I thought that white bottle with the man named Elmer on it was my suntan lotion.

Camaren and Danielle S., age 11
Wynnewood, Pennsylvania

Man: Hey hon, it looks like your head is getting sunburned.

Woman: I knew I shouldn't have gotten this haircut.

Laurynn M., age 12
Havre de Grace, Maryland

Man: I wash my feet this way.

Woman: Yeah, but only once a week.

Sarah M., age 10
Rockingham, North Carolina

Man: I'm glad you're not mad about our breakup.

Woman: One more little push and that shark will be hungry no more.

Debbie B., age 11
Blue Earth, Minnesota

GOOF TROUPE In our October "Letters to the Editors" we said that "Revoltin' But True" could be found on page 51. But it wasn't true. It appeared on page 47. How revolting! And, on the Answers page in our October issue, in the "It's Somewhere in the Attic" puzzle, the yellow outline around the hidden apple didn't print well. The apple is in the lower left-hand corner of the drawing, near the chair leg. We're embarrassed to the core.

Two-name Towns

by Stacey Bowers

Many American cities have nicknames. Here are the origins of five of them.

Beantown=Boston, Massachusetts

The first European inhabitants of Boston were Puritans, whose religious beliefs prohibited them from cooking on Sundays. To get around this rule, the women would prepare beans on Saturday night that would bake until the next morning. No one is quite sure when the term "Beantown" was coined, but this bean-baking tradition began in the early 1600s.

The City of Brotherly Love=Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Philadelphia means "City of Brotherly Love" in Greek. William Penn decided on the name when the site was given to him by King Charles II in 1681. Penn was the founder of what became Pennsylvania, and a leader of the Quaker religion, which is based on peaceful ideals. He felt the people who lived in Philadelphia would practice "brotherly love."

The Hornet's Nest=Charlotte, North Carolina

In 1780, during the American Revolution, British General Charles Cornwallis and his troops were defeated in Charlotte. Later, Cornwallis referred to the city as a "hornet's nest of rebellion." The name stuck, and these days, even Charlotte's NBA team is called the Hornets.

The Windy City=Chicago, Illinois

Contrary to popular belief, Chicago isn't called "The Windy City" because of its windy weather—15 other American cities are windier than Chicago. In the late 1800s, people who bragged were called "windy." And since proud Chicago residents campaigned hard to host the 1893 World's Columbian Exposition, the city came to be known as "The Windy City."

The Big Apple=New York, New York

New York City (below) was first called "The Big Apple" in the 1920s and 30s. When playing in the city, jazz musicians and other entertainers would say, "There are many apples on the tree, but only one big apple." They meant, of course, that New York City was the most important place to play.

CONTEST: NICKNAME YOUR CITY

Can you think of a new nickname for your city or town? If the name is groundbreaking, we'll put you on the map with some Nickelodeon prizes.

HERE'S HOW TO ENTER:

1. First, tell us your town's real name, then make up a nickname for it. Remember, it must be original.
2. Tell us what the nickname means. Your explanation should be 25 words or less.
3. Mail your entry by December 2, 1996, to:

Nickname-Your-City Contest
NICKELODEON MAGAZINE
